EDITORIAL

THE many new channels of foreign trade open to the United States since the war have brought foreign languages into the limelight.

Never before has a speaking knowledge of the tongues of our foreign brethren been so highly important as today; never before has an affirmative answer to "Parlez-vous français?" or "¿Hablan ustedes español?" been so essential, especially to American salesmen in other lands. It is lamentable that, at this time when linguistic skill is most needed, we should be, in comparison with other peoples, so far below par in language study. "We have foreign languages in the high schools. What more do you want?", some one demurs. Yes, we do have foreign languages, but the students have not yet learned to master them. Indeed, Americans have the reputation of being poor linguists. In a great measure this is due to the fact that Americans do not follow the European method of learning foreign languages, the method that the French, the German, the Italian scholars employ.

In the first place, in America, languages are more often taken up for mental discipline or for "credits" than for use in after life. In the second, even the best of our language students bear, only too often, a marked resemblance to that well-known prattler, the parrot. They learn the day's lesson, reel it off blithely in class, and leave it behind them as they depart at the end of the session. If, instead of aiming at a good mark, the pupil would try to master the tongue thoroughly, talk it wherever and whenever he has a chance, yes, and think in it, then, in a few years, he would begin to see results, then our foreign consuls would not have to complain of our lingual short-comings, then our southern neighbors would not term us "the tongue-tied gringos," and just about that time would not Uncle Sam's foreign trade quicken apace?

CLASS WILL

WE, of '21, without exception the best class that Taunton High has ever seen, being mentally, morally, and financially embarrassed, have nothing to leave to the second, the third, and the fourth-best classes but the following individual bequests:—

I. Brown:—My elongated extremities to Jakey Berkover '22.

A. Carr:—My excessive height to Young and Blake '22, to be shared equally.

M. Child:—To Hazel Lapham '22, my ability to look interested in history class so that I shall not be called on to recite.

D. Crew:—My ability to make an acquaintance to C. W. '23

G. Eaton:—My standing room in the E. Taunton car to H. Campbell '24.

S. Gardner:—To McNally, my crepe-de-chine basketball.

I. Goldstein:—To Mr. Walker, my goat which he angled for vainly for three years.

B. Grant:—My amusing laugh to Miss W---, French class.

H. Haskins:—To Ruth Ripley '23, my unsurpassed ability to secure the largest ice cream cone in the lunch room.

D. King:—To the lone girl in the Physics III class, my sympathy.

W. Mason:—To Brady '23, my scattered brains.

A. Masterson:—My sympathy to future history classes.

M. Menice:—My important position as drum-corps director of 106 to L. Brassel '22.

G. Miller:—To Dinty O'Day '22 my place in Mr. Quinn's affections.

A. Perra:—My well-polished sergeant's stripes to "Major" Dunn '22.

F. Quinlan:—My community powder-puff to any deserving Junior girl.

C. Sylvander:—To L. Gibson, my desk full of scrap paper in Room 101 that he so kindly left during study periods.

L. Witherell:—To C. W. '23, my "Cum laude," in the hope that she will prefix a "Magna."

CLASS PROPHECY

IRVING A. BROWN

AFTER I was graduated from the Taunton High School, I studied at Pecan University where I was graduated with the degree of N. U. T. and became a full-fledged squirrel on the tree of knowledge. But twenty years of hard labor was all I could endure. Crack! Crack!! Crack!!! This time it was my brain. My physician prescribed travel as a sure cure-all. In fact he insisted upon it if I desired permanent relief. And for months I looked to scenery and change of environment for the elixir of health. But I knew that I did not improve. Children pointed at me; old men gazed at me and shook their heads. Without consulting my physician, I determined now to seek human companionship. I felt that this was my only remaining hope.

Besides, I was down to my last nickel. So for safety I placed it in my mouth. Unfortunately a trio of ruffians composed of King, Mason, and Goldstein did me up. In consequence as I awakened from my state of innocuous desuetude, I discovered that I had swallowed the nickel. I leaned against the trolley post to support myself. Upon the approach of the car marked Herrington, I asked Motorman Cabral if I might ride for a nickel on the inside. Cabral with his accustomed graciousness admitted me. I climbed on and kept my ears open. Said Miss Austin to Miss Ballam, "If you'd only move over, one more could sit down."

"Yes," spoke up Conlon, nosing into the conversation, "if Cantoreggi would only get up, the whole carful could be seated."

Conlon was looking for local color for his new novel, and Cant, the blacksmith, showed him several shades of blue. Meanwhile Clara Briggs, being tired of strap-hanging, inquired if any of them had homes, as she, having stood on her feet all day, was greatly fatigued.

THE JOURNAL

"Heavens!" exclaimed Miss McKenney, "how foolish to stand on your own feet!"

Burke, the conductor, came up. "Fare," said he.

"Yes, pretty good day."

I began to cough.

"That's right," Menice, the doorman answered, "Cough it up."

Just then the car stopped, and all eyes were turned to Roseltha Sherman, the belle of the town, who daddled down the aisle.

"My good man," she said, as we approached her stop, "which end of the car shall I get out at?"

"Either, the car stops at both ends," broke in Carroll the newsy.

"Wait 'til I get my clothes on!"

We all turned in wonder toward the door, and in walked Miss Fitzgibbons with a basket of laundry.

"Change at the four corners," said Burke to Gladys Eaton, who carried a stenographer's satchel.

"I'll take my change now," she replied, "and don't be so fresh."

The conductor and motorman having conferred together, I threw myself out of their arms into the street. The ambulance coming to rest directly over my body, I was left by Burns, the driver, and Coe, the attendant, as a false alarm, for no one was to be found. However, Dill, the Aromata Cheese salesman, picked me up and carried me to Dr. Martin's hospital where, under the care of Martha Copeland and Helen Devereaux, combined with the administration of several bottles of Hutchins' Aqua Pura, I was turned out next day by the janitor, Joe Tetlow. But my health was not restored.

In front of the place, I asked Ripley, the hard beat cop, to direct me to the nearest drug store. Passing down the street, I saw Carr and Chandler in white-wing uniforms cleaning up everything possible. Inside the drug store—one of the Woodward chain—I asked M. Caswell at the fountain for some of her nose rouge. She looked searchingly, and then whispered to her assistant, F. Bowman, who, in a furtive manner, handed me a glass of root beer.

"Dick!" whispered Mil.

Swallowing glass and all, I turned. Sure enough, not a "tec" but Dickerman the great engineer, who invented the square ball-bearing. Going out, I met Gagliardi.

"Where are you living now?"

"Out in one of the superbs in the outskirts."

THE JOURNAL

"Really!" I exclaimed.

"Yes," continued Gag, "I've got a bungalow resigned by Miller, executed by Mansfield, furnished by L. Nearing, the inferior decorator, with indecent lighting by Taylor, and openwork plumbing by Glynn."

"I suppose you have a bath?" I inquired.

"Oh, no," laughed Gag, "I live there only two months a year."

My eye observed a sign "Rubber Collars Retreaded! Shoes Oiled with Squeakless Oil!!!" I entered the shop, only to find C. McGowan engaged in teaching shoes not to stick out their tongues. I wished him success and went on to Mary Kelliher's Hash House.

"Hamburg, cup of coffee," I ordered.

"Bull, chew it. Bossy black in the face," shouted the sunny-haired youth behind the counter, none other than Roger Witherell.

Attracted by the draft, I turned only to find Perra inhaling soup.

"Good soup," he said.

"Sounds good," added Maura O'Neil, the waitress.

Making a hasty exit ahead of Mary's cash register, I entered the Paymore Hotel.

"Sign here," said Needham to a lady ahead of me.

"No, sir," replied Miss McCaffrey, "I'm a business woman, and sign nothing I haven't read over."

A little boy, all brass buttons, "Bill" Swift it looked like, showed her to the elevator. Not wishing to take any chances, I walked up the stairs. "Jo" Parlow, in blue gingham, on hands and knees was operating with a mop and a cake of soap.

"Do you really believe ignorance is bliss?" she inquired, pointing to a sign, "Please Do Not Use Stairs," at the foot of the landing.

"I don't know," I replied, "You seem to be quite happy."

I reached my room two jumps ahead of the floor mop. My, but it was cold up there. I went to the phone and called the janitor.

"Who is it?"

"Tis Conway."

"I want some heat up here."

"Go die," he replied.

I hung up, not wishing to hear any more indecent language.

As there was a fireplace in the room, I walked out into the hall in search of something to burn. Under some red buckets on a shelf was a sign, "For Fire Purposes Only, by order of the Masterson, McMahon, McNamara Co." The very thing. Taking them in the room, I started a fire. I was now ready for bed.

THE JOURNAL

I turned to extinguish the "handy" light, but could not find the switch. 'Twas an E-Z Light manufactured by the Hathaway, Hollindale Co. Finally, in despair, I put it in the bureau drawer and shut it. Just before climbing in, I looked down to the street. I was about a mile up. Suppose I should fall! Luckily my eyes fell upon a sign on the wall "Safe in the Office." Down I went and explained to Gardner, the night clerk, that I had come down to be sure of safety.

"Only fools are sure of anything," he said.

"Sure of that?" asked Mildred Howe who had just come in from a tea-party.

"I certainly am," replied Gus, much to her amusement.

Next morning I was presented with my bill.

"I'm sorry—" I began.

"You don't leave here till it's paid," yelled "Jim" Goldie, the manager.

"Thank you, I'll make it my permanent home."

When I came to, I found myself on the operating table under the hands of Dr. Gregg. As I was coming out of the ether, I heard him tell the nurse, "Bea" Lapham, to pull the shade, as the patient was coming out and the fire across the street might lead me to believe the operation unsuccessful. I left abruptly, pawned my gold tooth, and hastened to the railway station. "A ticket for Ware," I said to Miss Golub behind the wicket.

"Where?"

"Ware," I replied. Finally, with fire in my eye, I wrote it out.

"One dollar."

"Ninety-eight cents I'll give you."

"No cut rates."

"All right, I don't argue, I'll walk."

Soon I heard a whistle. "Whistle all you want, I won't come back," I thought. Happily it was a double track, and I was on the right one, which was left.

A bit farther on I met Spencer Eaton. "I'm a detective," he said.

"What kind of dog is that?" I inquired.

"Oh that's my gum-slot poodle; he gets the scent. I'm looking for Grant, the President of this railroad."

"How'll you find him out here?" I queried.

"Don't you see I am on his track?" The boy certainly is clever.

Stopping at a house by the track, I begged a bite.

"I've nothing at all," answered B. Leonard, "I'm baking biscuits."

"I'll be back in half an hour," said I, ducking just in time to escape a blow.

THE JOURNAL

At the next house, Dorothy Ricketson gave me a cordial welcome by throwing a grape juice bottle in my general direction.

Reclining under a tree to rest, I observed Tom Flangheddy cavorting about in the branches. "I'm a bird," sang he. I evaporated quietly from the scene.

Slam!! I was surrounded by a net, also by Misses Witherell, Tullock, Rafter, Childs, and Clay. "I've got it!" shouted Louise, removing the net from my head and extracting a small winged insect. "It's a jazz bug." They drove me to the next town in their stone boat.

The pangs of hunger could not be suppressed. "Madame," said I to Miss Gough, who had just stepped out of her Panhard limousine, "I am slowly starving."

"I'm sorry," replied Carolyn, "but I know of no way to hasten the process." However, Miss Vasconcelles gave me a Nicoteena cigarette. You know, they stupify; Cohen & Barr make them."

On a billboard in front of a theater I saw Warner's Roof Garden. George Thayer, manager, presents Mlle. Bolster and her troupe who have just returned from Egypt where they were rivals to the Sphinx. I noticed the names of Misses Babbitt, Weygand, Campbell, Bourgoins, as the Nifty Babies Four; also Wise, Young, and Dean, The Jazz Trio.

As I saw Miss Macomber passing out envelopes in front of the opera house, I took one, which contained a handbill of the performance and a free ticket. It was the opening night, and the place was full.

Sophie Macphee and Laura Nichols were ushering. The prima donna, "Dot" Crew, rendered several beautiful selections assisted by Gladys Lincoln and Hester MacDonald, and accompanied by Alice Davis and "Stew" Waterfield.

I left early, but could not avoid the rush for the exits. Meeting Ted Spencer, I accepted his invitation, and we entered the Wide-awake Cafe.

The Spillanes, the "Dotty Sisters" of the day, entertained us until Pond inadvertently poured hot soup down Ted's neck. Pond excused himself on the ground that he was glancing at Frankie Quinlan, Hilda Haskins, and Dot King who had just entered.

"I'm sorry," explained the Baron, "but I was wondering where they inherited their complexions.

"Fathers must have been calceminers, I guess," said Ted.

Leaving Spencer to lecture to Miss Richmond and Doris Marshall on the evils of vamping, I departed for the city park where I expected to pass the night. The only unoccupied bench was occupied by Sylvander and Ethel Levy, who, as usual, weren't speaking.

THE JOURNAL

I passed on remembering that Asbury lived nearby. I rang the bell and "Dot" Cahoon, the French maid, answered. Explaining my business, I asked her if there was anybody at home.

"No," she replied, "this is George Bowman's residence," and slammed the door.

I proceeded circumspectly down the boulevard. "Could you direct me to the Salvation Army?"

"Masher!!" shrieked Hazel Boutilier, as she hit me with her umbrella. I managed to find the way, however.

It was no commonplace barracks that met my eye.

At the head was Adeline Hoernlein, who with her assistants, Miss Haskins, Hallin, Hackett, and Hodges, was doing fine work. As it cost me nothing, I spent the night.

Next morning, I found Asbury. "How did your speech go last night?"

"Fine! When I sat down, everyone said it was the best thing I ever did."

On the way to court, where he had a case on trial, we stopped in a haberdasher's.

"What made that customer walk out?" shouted Kelliher angrily to Miss Botway.

"I don't know. It was Ciolkosz, the dentist; he asked for a hat to suit his head, and I showed him a soft one."

"What's this so great about your new umbrella?" asked Will of Miss Cooperstein.

"Well, you see," replied Sarah, "nobody can walk off with it. When it is not in use, I keep the handle in my pocket."

At court I saw Elsie Evans as judge with Misses Coyle, Fenton, Cassidy, Hart, McCormick, and Molden in the jury box. The other six were men. Miss Cooper was in the witness box. "Pardon me one moment," said Elsie Young, counsel for defense, "what was your last sentence?"

"I object," interrupted Willard.

"Objection not sustained," said Miss Evans.

"Witness, what was your last sentence?"

"Six months," replied Harriett, much to the amusement of Miss Silverman and Miss Teplow.

"Take them out," and Mary Rose took them out. The next witness was Ken Rankin.

"What's your occupation?" asked the judge.

"I'm a pall-bearer in the post office," said Ken. "I carry dead letters."

Miss Reid, council for plaintiff, withdrew her witness before he did any more damage and placed him under the care of Nellie Simmons, the sheriff. The next case was that of Grace Woodward against the Parlow Pencil Company. Grace being an authoress, claimed that she could not write with the pencils furnished her as they spelled all the words wrong.

THE JOURNAL

I stepped into a news store to buy a ticket for the next boat across. Vi Rayment was talking to Helen Wiley.

"I want to get Skeet a book for a birthday present. What binding is most suitable?"

"Calf, I should say," replied Helen.

I bought my ticket, and went aboard. About a day out the ship foundered, but as she carried a cargo of soap, we were all washed ashore. The strain was too great for me, however, and I have never fully recovered. The prescription of my physician had failed. All this change of scenery and of environment had availed nothing; nor had my human relationship. Nothing remained for me but pleasant recollections of renewed acquaintance with my mates of the class of 1921. May their shadows never grow less!

A DOMESTIC TRAGEDY

ETHEL RICHMOND

A windless, dreary downpour beat upon the tin roof of the low farm kitchen, filling the room with its depressing rumble. At long intervals a single great drop seeped through the board ceiling and fell square upon the newspaper of the man before the stove, but he gave no sign that he noticed. Although his deep brooding eyes were fixed upon the print, it was plain that he did not read and that he was unconscious of everything about him. His whole attitude was one of gloomy thought. His powerful frame was slouched heavily in the chair, one foot elevated upon the stove hearth, the other stretched along the floor before him. His moody brows were drawn into a straight black line, and his jaw clinched the stem of a begrimed corn-cob pipe, at which he puffed explosively. The wrinkled edge of his newspaper was clutched in a knotted, hard, brown fist.

A woman shuffled back and forth through the acrid haze of smoke from the pipe, but he neither spoke to her nor looked in her direction. He did not even glance up when she stumbled over his feet on her way to the woodbox for fuel. She was a woman nearing forty, still comely, although now her face was drawn and her feet dragged with weariness. She was "setting a sponge" of bread dough for overnight, and as she slowly stirred in the flour, she glanced with a curious apprehension at the moody figure by the stove. Twice she seemed about to speak, but paused doubtfully. At last, as several drops of water splashed upon the man's newspaper, she said, in a cheerful tone which was plainly forced "Your paper's gettin' all wet, Jed."

"I guess I know it," growled the man between his teeth. But he did not move, and the woman with a worried pucker on her forehead turned to her bread again. The only sound was the drumming of the rain on the roof and the scrape and thump of the woman's mixing. Merely to relieve the quiet she rattled her spoon and pan, and, as she finished, clapped the cover on the pan with a resounding clash. She pulled a little table raspingly toward the stove and set the pan with a thump upon it, meanwhile attempting to hum a little tune, which died out vaguely in the oppressive silence. Sighing, she picked up a mending basket and settled herself in a chair beside the smoky lamp.

THE JOURNAL

Suddenly Jed threw down the paper and clumped across the kitchen to the window with his head still bowed in gloomy meditation. He stared into the darkness through the rain-spotted glass and slowly knocked his pipe against the sill. Gradually his sagging hulk of a figure straightened, and the muscles of his jaw knotted. Then, without turning he said, deliberately and calmly, "I'll kill him, Mame. I'll kill him tonight."

"Jed Morley!" gasped the woman, swallowing the last syllable with a little choke. Her hands dropped limply to the pile of mending in her lap, and she stared in a kind of daze at her husband.

"Oh! You—you—Oh, don't!" she whispered, faintly.

Morley turned upon his heel, and with a sardonic smile and reckless jerk of his shoulders, said, "He's grabbing everything I've got on the place. I can't stand it. I won't stand it. It'll be a good thing when he's gone."

"But, Jed, I don't want you to," trembled the woman.

"What do I care what you want?" snarled Morley, angry now. "You could've stopped him from gettin' that corn, but you never stirred your stumps to save it for me. Just let it go the way everything else has gone in the last few weeks! Just let him have it!"

"Jed, don't kill him. I should think you could get along with him some way," said the woman, pleadingly. "I always did. I—I always kind of liked him."

The man turned upon her angrily.

"Yes. You! Oh, you could get along with him all right. You always kind of liked him. I know well enough yuh did. Lettin' him set on my porch all day, and you talkin' to him and feedin' him pie and cake. I know yuh kind of liked him, but I told yuh I'd kill him, and I will tonight. He won't sit on my porch again, eatin' my victuals and plannin' what he'll grab next. I know where to find him tonight well enough. I'll slit his throat for him!"

Mame stared speechlessly as her husband whirled across the room, slapped an old felt hat on his head, and hunched himself into a ragged coat. He strode to the mantel and drew from behind the row of kerosene lamps a slender knife. His violent movements unbalanced a glass chimney, and it fell with a splintering crash into the sink.

At sight of the knife, the wife gave a little cry and sprang toward him.

"Not that way! O Jed, not that way!"

"It's as good a way as any I know of," he snarled, and pushing her aside he flung himself through the door, slamming it so that the dingy walls of the old kitchen shook. He stepped from the porch in one great stride, and splashed through the shallow pond that was his dooryard. Once in the sodden field beyond, he stepped more carefully, but his determination did not lessen. The drenching rain soaked the brim of his hat, and it flapped sloppily about his ears, sending rivulets of water inside the unbuttoned neck of his coat. His feet sank into the half liquid earth of the field, and the mud oozed into the tops of his shoes, but he paid not the slightest attention. Cautiously he neared the orchard. In the darkness and downpour nothing was visible far ahead save the shifting outlines of the trees. Morley stopped, and looked about him, thrusting his head forward to determine his position.

THE JOURNAL

"The fool comes down to that tree in the lower corner," he thought. "I'll get him there, sure."

He crept toward the vague gray shape of the tree, and circling slowly, reached the outermost tips of its low branches. He listened. There was no sound but the monotonous swish of the rain. Stooping, he advanced step by step beneath the boughs and gazed upward. Between himself and the dusk of the sky loomed a dim outline, only a blacker blot among the dripping branches. The figure seemed not to have perceived him. He crouched lower, and slid a step farther. Then with a spring he threw himself upward, his mighty arms closed about the figure, and without a cry both fell back into the mud.

The clinging stuff hindered Morley's movements; it soaked his flapping coat; it plastered his hair and face and held him down; but with a colossal effort he struggled to his feet, still with his clutching hands about the neck of his enemy.

"I've got you," he rasped, hoarsely. "Thought 'twas her comin' to feed yuh chocolate cake maybe, didn't yuh! I knew well enough where you'd be roostin' tonight. But you won't roost on my porch again. You've done it for the last time. D'ye hear? The last time!"

With a swift movement Morley whipped the knife from his pocket. One horrible cry shivered above the pelting of the rain, and Morley leaned panting against the tree trunk, gazing fascinated at the dreadful figure struggling in the slimy mud. But even as he gazed the soft splash of a footstep sounded behind him. A hand appeared out of the darkness and thrust something quickly toward him.

"Jed," quavered the voice of his wife, "Here's the pail and a kettle of hot water. You pick him. Don't seem's if I could. He was the handsomest rooster we ever owned."

DEBATING

IRVING A. BROWN

THE High School has reason to be proud of its Debating Team and the Kappa Chi Debating Society. From a membership of fifteen it has expanded to fifty. Its record has been unblemished and this year we not only turned out a winning team as usual but paid all the expenses incurred from the treasury of the society.

Acting upon arrangements made by the president—Mr. Brown, and our coach—Mr. Quinn, the team under the leadership of Captain Asbury defeated New Bedford on March 18th, receiving the award by a unanimous vote of the judges. The question was: Resolved that immigration to the United States should be abolished for a period of two years. A committee consisting of Captain Asbury and President Brown had all but completed arrangements with Brockton, when, after weeks of deliberation, Brockton finally discovered that she had defeated herself by her own statement of the question. Immediately Brockton quit cold.

During the year a new office was created, that of Business Manager, to facilitate debating arrangements.

Surely the school should be proud of a society that produces winning teams year after year.

High School Orchestra

THE ORCHESTRA

SPENCER E. EATON

UNDER the leadership of Mr. Clemson and Mr. Robert Park, the High School Orchestra has made an excellent beginning. The orchestra meets Wednesday evenings for two hours of practice. It has played several times at school assemblies, but its first public appearance was at the health meeting of the Elementary Teachers' Association.

The following are members of the orchestra:

1st Violin

STUART WATERFIELD	ARTHUR SMERDON	FRANK COHEN
EARL SUNDERLAND	SHELDON DEAN	HENRY STAMPEL
PAUL GOLDSTEIN

2nd Violin

HIRAM RECKARD	HERMANN SPOUSTA
Clarinet, KENNETH GARSIDE

Cornet

EDMUND GULLAGE	CLEMENS KERN
Flute, SPENCER EATON

Trombone

JOSEPH GAFFNEY	SHELDON WILLIAMS
Cello, ROBERT CHANDLER	Drums, HUBERT HAWKINS
Piano, RAYMOND WICHER

THE JOURNAL

A change, during the past four years, has come about in the method of selecting the Major. Now he is appointed by the drill master, and not selected by competitive drill.

Since certain cadets remain in the High School five years, they attain higher offices than they would ordinarily get. This prevents a few of the regular four-year students from becoming commissioned officers. Therefore I recommend that the following amendment be added to the constitution of the Taunton High School Cadets: "All men serving in the cadets for more than four years shall automatically be transferred to the officers' staff and shall retain the same rank which they held in their fourth year, the same to be placed on their Honorable Discharge." Then the fifth-year man would be able to continue his drilling, and a fourth-year man could at the same time have what rightly belongs to him.

The competition this year between the companies is very keen, both officers and privates thinking theirs is the better company. The keenness of this competition is shown not only in the company movements, but also in the manual of arms.

The competitive drill this year will be held in June. The drills are now held in the State Armory, and the entire Battalion at the present time is looking forward to the June Drill, which, as all indications show, will be as great a success as were the two previous prize drills.

FOOTBALL

ARTHUR M. POND

AS Walter Camp, the great American athlete and writer said, "It is not the victory that counts so much, but the spirit in which the game is played." For the last two years the Taunton football squad have had their ups and downs, but always in victory or defeat they have played the game according to Mr. Camp's idea.

Coach Danolds, or "Pat", as all know him, had the great task of forming inexperienced men into suitable material to meet the fast teams of New Bedford, Brockton, Fairhaven, and Fall River. Having suffered defeat by these seasoned players, Taunton always came up smiling ready for the next. It is an honor to win, but a far greater honor to take defeat as Taunton has. The class of '21 wish to extend to "Pat" and Captain Cohen their heartiest wishes for a victorious season for 1921.

BASEBALL

ARTHUR M. POND

At the first call for baseball candidates the old-time High School spirit prevailed. Over thirty men came out in response to "Pat's" notice. With "Bobby" Gregg as captain and eight veterans of last year, Taunton is out for the championship of the Bristol County league and for the cup.

The baseball team is putting over a better brand of playing than in former years. Backed by the A. A., numbering over three hundred members, and by the enthusiastic support of the student body, the Orange and Black is sure to be the winner.

GIRLS' BASKET BALL

LOUISE AUSTIN

The girls' gymnasium, under the instruction of Mr. Danolds, has been a great success. As soon as the girls had been drilled in the regular setting-up exercises, they entered directly into basket ball. A series of interesting games was played between the Sophomore, Junior, and Senior classes, a plan which tended to foster class spirit in a large degree. Notwithstanding the fact that some of the girls on the teams had never played before, there were some snappy games full of quick, dashy playing.

When spring came, the girls were taught indoor baseball. There were some very exciting games down in the gymnasium, even though the players were not entirely professional in appearance.

Basket ball and baseball were the most common sports, but of the two, basket ball is undoubtedly the more important. A few years ago basket ball was of very little import in schools and colleges, but in the last two years, it has risen in popularity to the side of baseball and football. Practically every high school of any size or importance has a girls' basket ball team.

The girls of Taunton High have material to produce a winning team. The objection may immediately arise that they have had altogether too little experience, that they are over-confident. That quality is not over-confidence, but enthusiasm. It is because of enthusiasm that the members of the girls' gym. class of '21 have it in their power to win, and they are all looking forward to next winter in great anticipation of the time when they can give further proof of their ability.

TEACHER (reading): "The woman threw herself into the river.
Her husband rushed to the bank." Now tell me why her husband rushed to the bank.
Cant: "To get the insurance money."

COACH: "Have you taken a shower?"

Berkover: "No, is one missing?"

CARR: "Did you see the barb-wire dresser at the Drill?"

Chandler: "No, what was that?"

Carr: "Protect the property but don't obstruct the view."

FRASER (in class): "Every time I get up some fool speaks."

THE JOURNAL

BLEVINS: "Hey, don't shoot! Your gun isn't loaded!"

Spencer: "Can't help it, the bird won't wait."

R A.: "Don't you want to start the Vic?"

R. H.: "Why?"

R. A.: "It's about time you started something."

Ist. Serg't Burke: "What right have you got to swear before me?"

Private: "How did I know you wanted to swear first?"

GIRLING: "I didn't get to drill today till after roll call, but I fooled them."

Molasses: "How's that?"

Girling: "I slipped into the ranks when nobody was looking."

COHEN: "How do you know he's an osteopath?"

Hemingway: "I heard him say he made his money rolling the bones."

D C.: "I told you to come after supper and it's only six o'clock now."

W. A.: "That's what I came after."

MR. Walker: "Do you know why you can't get better marks?"

Cabral: "I can't think."

POND: "Say, how long could I live without brains?"

Perra: "That remains to be seen."

DILL: "I had a fall last night that rendered me unconscious for six hours."

Dick: "What happened?"

Dill: "I fell asleep."

TAYLOR (at drill): "Pardon my forgetfulness, but do you spell your name with an 'e' or an 'i'?"

She: "With an 'i', please,—Hill."

STORIES OF REAL LIFE

Girl, boy, buggy,
Boy, auto,
Girl, boy, auto,
Boy, buggy,

Last Sunday evening
I went riding with Jane.
About 11
When the moon was fine,
Jane said,
"I'm cold."
So I stopped and got a blanket
From the carrier,
And I bundled
Her up.

This Sunday
Jane
Went riding
With Jack.

—I thank you.

THE SECRETS OF SUCCESS

Here are the secrets of success:

First, what the public wants possess, That brings you friends that never fail,
And, second, only of a grade Sixth, let the customers expect
That satisfies and holds the trade, To pay for what you sell—collect,
Third, make the public realize And, seventh, see the price they pay
You have it—that's to advertise, Leaves something for a rainy day—
Fourth, watch expenses to a penny That makes quite simple secret eight:
So you can sell as cheap as any, To grow, and never to inflate.
Fifth, give some service with the sale

THE SENIOR ALPHABET

A stands for Algebra I
That nobody ever has done,
For we go to see
In room 1-0-3
Mr. Walker, and have lots of fun.

BASEBALL and Bob begin with a B,
And why it is most easy to see
For Baseball sans Bob
Would be quite a job,
And hard on the old Orange T.

C's the big letter in our editor's name
And he's a boy known to fame;
He's always quite right,
But in plays he's a sight,
Now wouldn't you call that a shame.

D is the letter that stands for Debate
Where Ashury and Carr are just simply great,
Their minds are so keen,
That it's easily seen
Why their opponents meet such a fate.

F. H. CUSHMAN

Eat a plate of Cushman's Ice Cream every day.

E is for English—we love (?) it so well;
Although about Comus we little can tell,
Though on Johnson we're hazy,
And Macbeth was crazy,
These things our love for it never can quell.

FLUNK is a word we all hate to hear.
Its sound is painful unto the ear.
For the older we grow,
And the less we know,
The more and more we have it to fear.

G is for "Gordy," a lad,
Who's not, when you know him,
half bad;
But with Mr. Quinn,
He had a run in,
Which made little Gordon quite sad.

H is for Helen so sweet,
Who blushing met her defeat;
For "I have a cold"
Is really too old
For a musical maid to repeat.

O stands for Maura O'Neil,
Of spelling she knows a good deal,
For though we did rue it
That we couldn't do it
She earned the ten dollars, we feel.

P could stand for no one but Pat—
And to him we take off our hat—
In baseball we're winning
In 'most every inning,
And to him we owe most of that.

Q is most always a little bit queer;
But not so the 'q' we have here;
The reason no doubt,
Will soon be found out,
For Frankie you know is a dear!

W stands for Woodward, the boy
Who gets out of music (?) much joy.
He's the man with the drum,
Playing rum-a-tum-tum
For the world, like a kid with a toy.

X is as usual unknown
He's a Senior who "modest has grown"
He does not declare,
With a gratified air,
That the whole earth is twenty-one's own.

Y is the letter that stands for you,
Oh dear august Senior who,
In scanning this book,
Stops a minute to look,
And smiles at a good line or two.

Z is really the very last
Of this, our dear old High School past;
It stands for us all,
Large, medium, small,
And the happy four years gone so fast.
